Quote of the Week

"Life is like photography. You need the negatives to develop."

~ Ziad K. Abdelnour

From the Headmaster

MR P L McAVOY

People tell me I procrastinate...and I've thought about that....

It is never too late to start studying. Whilst this week is dominated by the Reunion Weekend and Old Boys Day, to which I willingly cede the front page, we need to lift our eyes and see the challenges and opportunities that lie before us between now and 30 June. We all want to stay positive and set priorities. Time is precious; so it's very important to make the most of what time you do have.

Have you ever found that you put off tackling important tasks, whilst still finding time to do the more interesting or easier things ? This is procrastination.

We all do it, but some believe they must always turn in perfect work, which can prevent them from finishing it on time. Ultimately, the more you delay, the worse the problem becomes.

A good approach is to think :

- There's no time like the present.
- The sooner I get it done, the sooner I can do what I like.
- It's less painful to do it right now rather than wait until it gets worse.

It is important to :

Set clear goals – think about what you need, and want, to get done.

Stay positive – jumping to negative conclusions will make a wall of fear and it becomes harder to start the tasks.

Find quiet time to study – distractions are the enemy of good grades. Make space and time for your brain to quiet and focus on the task at hand.

Take advantage of all time during your school day – making use of part of your break or time spent waiting for a lift or riding on the bus home will mean fewer late nights spent on homework when you're already tired from practice or competition.

Avoid putting yourself under stress – the beauty of planning is that it should reduce your stress levels by making you feel more in control. Planning can also alert you to when you're take on too much and need to fit in some down-time along with study time.

Ask for help – if you're struggling, ask your parents, teachers or counsellors for help and advice.

Have fun – playing sports can help your brain be better prepared to study so have fun on the field and enjoy the adventure of learning.

If there is a competition between sports and academics, it can be a healthy competition where the student acquires organizational and mental skills worthy of any professional manager, skills that will deliver lasting benefits throughout their lifetime. This is the perfect time to challenge self-imposed boundaries. Maintain sports commitments through to the Hilton fixture on 10 June. Work and study hard at the same time.

Your Teen's Bad Language – What Can You Do?

By Penny S. Harmon

Let's face it. When you see your two-year old let out an expletive that Dad uses, you think it's cute. After all, it's unexpected and he didn't even grin when saying it! Yet, once our children become teens, they begin to explore other language use, including curse words and words that you don't even say. At this point, it's not cute anymore. But what is a parent to do to help cut the bad language out of our teen's vocabulary?

First of all, your teen can be using bad language for a number of reasons. One of them may be to simply push your buttons. Teens like to feel they are in control and by swearing in front of their parent, they are simply testing the boundaries, seeing exactly how far they can go. Sometimes teens just need to have the boundaries set for them in a clear manner.

Another reason your teen may be cursing is that they hear it around them too often. Most parents don't even realize how much they swear until the teen points it out to them. "Well, you swear. Why can't I?" is often the response parents get when they confront their teen. In this instance, the teen is often right. When it is heard around them constantly, they simply repeat what they are hearing. At this point, the parent has got to take control over their own language, as well.

When you ask your teen why they are swearing, you may also get a response that it's cool and all their friends do it, too. This is where you may run into a problem making your teen understand that swearing is not cool. Your teen needs to understand that there are times that bad language is not appropriate, such as in front of authority figures, loved ones, and elders. Everyone let's out expletives by accident and your teen is old enough to know this and understand the difference.

If your teen continues to swear, regardless of how much you have talked to them about this behaviour, you must take action. They are old enough to understand consequences of bad behaviour and you must remain consistent in giving repercussions. There is the old stand-by of grounding them for this bad language or you can go further, such as making them pay money out of their allowance for each bad word they use. Put this money in a jar where your teen is able to see just how much money they are losing by swearing. At this age, your teen doesn't want to give money away. They'd much rather be spending it at the mall.

Bad language is not okay for a teen to use and finding the right way to stop your teen's language may be tough. However, it can be done. It's just about finding the right way, whether it's coming up with crazy words for them to use instead or fining them for each bad word they say. Just remember, if they hear it, they're probably going to repeat it.

Sport & Culture

From the Head of Extramurals

Mr G. Le Roux gleroux@nwood.co.za
Deputy Headmaster – Extramurals

Today marks the start of our inaugural Reunion Weekend and it is packed with events from start to end. From Water Polo fixtures against our Old Boys to a special assembly with them, it truly is a special time in our year. Our boys get a chance to meet those that have walked before them, and draw inspiration from them, as our boys continue their journey to Knighthood. These Knights can share many stories about the school, its unique history, and their unique path through the school. I would like to encourage our boys to embrace it and remember this occasion. With Old Boys Day concluding our Reunion Weekend, I can assure you every boy will be playing to make those Old Boys proud. Proud of our performance, proud of our passion and proud of our determination. Irrespective of results, I know our boys will fight for every inch and play with pride as our Old Boys look on. I thank all our staff members for the effort and energy that has been invested in this weekend. I would also like to wish our learners involved all the best for their sports fixtures on Saturday.

Compulsory Reminder:

Grade 8: Meet at Astro turf at 10:30.

Grades 8-12: Meet on Main Grand Stands at 13:30
