From the Headmaster's Desk

Dear Parent

There is a school of thought that the youth of today are not as tough and resilient as those generations that came before them. In fact, many so called experts describe the current generation as those who are a bit lost, and that because of them we should be concerned about the future.

I have however, seen so much evidence that contradicts these sentiments. No more so than when I was sent a recent screenshot from Mrs. Reddy from our Science Department. The screenshot was of the cover page of a grade 12 answer booklet, an answer booklet that showed that a boy in the class obtained a fantastic mark of 95%. An incredible result in arguably the toughest of subjects.

It is when I saw the name of the student that my eyes teared up and my heart grew weak. You see, the boy in question had just suffered the most horrendous heartache and devastation. Having been sick for a time and then hospitalized, the young man also lost his mom only a few days before the exam. How hard must it have been for this young man to prepare for such a challenge? How hard must it have been to get through a weekend where you bury your mom and then have to switch to concentrating on the task at hand? I can just imagine, but I also know that I could not have managed what this hero did.

As this boy fought his battle, many others are dealing with different and other challenges every day. They deal with these challenges in spite of all that is going on around them. They deal with these challenges in spite of missing out on everything they love.

These young men are far stronger and more resilient than any of us have ever been. Instead of being nervous about this generation, I am excited by them. I am inspired by them and I am eager to learn from them.

May our boys continue to flourish! And may God continue to bless them.
